Databases are large, searchable collections of academic journal articles. Each subject area has one or more databases that give access to a wide range of electronic resources. You can find some of the best databases for your course from your subject page. You can narrow the results by choosing your subject area and then click on any of the databases to use them.

Not all these databases restrict their results to what we have in stock but anything we do not have you can request as an interlibrary loan. Remember that information may be available in print or online or sometimes even in both formats. You can search the contents of many of our databases using the Discovery Service.
